INTRODUCTION

The University Seminars are groups of professors and other experts, from Columbia and elsewhere, who gather once a month to work together on problems that cross the boundaries between university departments.

Each Seminar elects its own officers, plans its own program and selects its own Members from Columbia, Associate Members from elsewhere, and any speakers or other guests it invites to its sessions. About half the Seminars admit selected graduate students as guests. Seminar participants and speakers attend by invitation and neither pay nor are paid, although a central office supports travel and hotel expenses for speakers when its endowment income permits.

As independent entities, the Seminars can take intellectual risks the University might not otherwise assume. They provide something every great institution needs: a small area where activities are fast, cheap, and out of control. Columbia is one of the few universities, or businesses, with the courage to institutionalize such independence.

The Seminars link Columbia with the intellectual resources of the surrounding communities. This outreach also offers to both worlds the fruits of interaction and mutual criticism, as well as the advantages of close contacts: a place to network, establish ties, exchange scholarly or professional news, or explore either side of the job market.

For the benefit of a broader audience, the Seminars make the minutes of most past meetings available to users of the Columbia Library. Each Seminar has a web page, but decides for itself how to use it. (To encourage candor in discussion of controversial issues, Seminars may exercise discretion over the contents and distribution of their minutes.) The Seminars subsidize the publication of certain books written under their auspices, and arrange conferences to make public their discoveries or to work quietly with scholars too distant to be regular Seminar participants.

Some Seminars are tight, restricted discussion groups that study unfashionable problems; others are broad-based lecture series where eminent visitors disseminate the latest knowledge. Frank Tannenbaum, the founder of the University Seminars, believed that uniformity would destroy them.

Scholars and others interested in attending a seminar should email their credentials to the appropriate chair. Seminars are listed in the order in which they were founded, from 1944 to the present. An index at the back of the directory lists the seminars alphabetically.

HISTORY OF THE SEMINARS

In the nineteen thirties, Professor Frank Tannenbaum had discussed with Nicholas Murray Butler the idea of ongoing groups of Columbia professors and experts from the whole region to explore matters no single department had the breadth or the agility to study. Butler liked the idea as a quick way to mobilize the intellectual resources of the University about suddenly emerging problems, but World War II supervened and it was 1944 before his successor, Frank Fackenthal, approved the first five University Seminars. Three of these Seminars still meet: Peace, Religion, and The Renaissance.

The Seminars have continued to serve Butler’s purpose, but they have also become an intrinsic part of the enterprise Columbia does better than any great university in the world, the ongoing education of its own faculty.

Most of this education takes place within the academic departments, but Tannenbaum was continuing a tradition of General Education in a Core Curriculum that Columbia had been developing for thirty years. The Contemporary Civilization and the Humanities courses are famous for the breadth they give Columbia undergraduates, and astonishingly unrecognized as a bootcamp where econometricians acquire sophistication by conducting rough and tumble discussions of Plato.

This tradition positioned Columbia professors to invent the interdisciplinary regional institutes that trained graduate students to handle post-war complexities beyond their departments, but also forced political scientists, economists, and literary scholars to learn from each other. Over the past two thirds of a century, the Seminars have offered more and more specialists from Columbia and elsewhere the chance to learn and discover things together.

When Tannenbaum died in 1969, there were fifty Seminars. He and his wife left the Seminars a million and a half dollars in their wills, to be invested and reinvested as a dedicated part of Columbia’s endowment. Tannenbaum wrote a charter to “protect the spontaneity of the Seminars from an unstructured situation [in which] interference is inevitable, because the desire for general rules and uniformity is irresistible.” The Director of the Seminars was to be appointed by the President of the University but selected and instructed by a General Committee, consisting of Columbia’s President, Provost, and the chairs of all the Seminars.

Frank Tannenbaum 1893–1969; historian of Latin America; Slavery; and Prison Systems. Professor Tannenbaum was a founder and the first director of the University Seminars.

In the four decades since, the number of Seminars has grown to the eighty-five listed in this Directory. About half the Seminars that have been founded are still meeting, while half have merged, split, or dissolved. James Gutman followed Tannenbaum as Director from 1969 to 1975, followed by Aaron Warner, from 1976 to 2000, and Robert Belknap from 2001 to 2011, when his student Robert Pollack succeeded him.

Above: The philosopher James Gutman succeeded Tannenbaum as director of the Seminars; and in 1976, Aaron Warner (above, right), professor of economics and Dean of the School of General Studies was appointed as his successor. Director Emeritus Robert Belknap (middle right) has been succeeded this year by Robert Pollack (bottom right).
In 2010–2011 the eighty-five active Seminars held about 540 meetings, 311 of them in our seminar rooms on the second floor of the Faculty House. The cafeteria on the second floor, which mainly served graduate students, was closed last fall. Though this loss is regrettable, it has made it easier for the Faculty House staff to set up our meetings. They rarely have to work the moveable walls so the setup and transitions have much improved. Over the winter break this year, a rug will replace the very old wooden floor on the second floor and this should help with any lingering noise issues. It has been a pleasure to work with David Martin, Jeimy Batista, Leslie Robinson, Marlon Alvarez and all the Faculty House staff. Scott Wright continues to support the University Seminars and has helped develop a firm partnership here. We have adapted to the absence of cashiers and the collection of cash and checks for dinners by rapporteurs is getting smoother. Jonathan Bourdett has been with us again this year, making sure the evening meetings run smoothly. And we have been very fortunate to receive help from Ivan Lupic, Shakespeare scholar and rapporteur extraordinaire, with our Directory and other tasks in the office.

The office staff has significantly changed! The director for the past 10 years, Robert Belknap, stepped down in December. Robert Pollack has stepped in ably and taken the reins from his former teacher. Alice Newton and Gessy Alvarez have both been promoted; Alice is now the Associate Director and Gessy is the Finance Manager. Pamela Guardia left in February to have a beautiful baby girl, Olivia. She expects to return in January. Summer Hart joined us first as a temp and now as our new Archive and Web Administrator. We have hired a consultant to help redesign our webpage and Summer will manage content on the new site. Our archive project, which digitized decades of seminar minutes, will continue with the scanning of correspondences, General Meeting and office meeting minutes and directors’ papers. Summer will work with Columbia’s Library and will facilitate the availability of archived minutes.

Seminars last as long as their leadership and the need for the Seminar warrant. Some seminars ceased meeting this year. Four seminars began in academic year 2010: Sites of Cinema; Narrative, Health, & Social Justice; Columbia School Linguistics; and Global Strategy. The following new seminars have begun meeting this fall or will begin in the spring: Interdisciplinary Curricula; Complexity
Science, Modeling and Sustainability; Catholicism, Culture and Modernity; Dance; and Religion and Writing.

BOB BELKNAP RETIRES

On December 8, 2010, a celebration was held to honor Robert Belknap, on the occasion of his retirement. In addition to teaching Russian literature and Literature Humanities for over fifty years, Bob chaired the Literature Humanities program, the General Education program, the Slavic Department, and the Harriman Institute; he also served as both Dean of Student Affairs and Dean of Columbia College. In the past decade, Bob has guided the University Seminars, leading the program deftly and with unabashed affection, through a decade of vibrant growth.

From the new director of University Seminars, Robert Pollack

I first met Bob in 1957, walking into Hamilton as a freshman from Coney Island’s Abraham Lincoln High School. He was my teacher in Humanities A, the first and to my mind the most disturbing and therefore important of the courses that make up the College’s Core Curriculum. I am proud to say that he has also been my colleague at Columbia through nearly half a century. But to me Bob Belknap is, as he always was, my teacher: the first person who asked me what it was that I thought was important about a book we’d all just read. Our hair may have whitened, but if he were to ask me about Darwin or I were to ask him about Dostoyevsky tomorrow, neither of us would be surprised.

As we have grown older, the University has grown, and is once again expanding, this time nearly doubling its footprint to accommodate ever more advanced research facilities in Manhattenville. It strikes me that the clever, productive minds that will make Manhattenville hum were likely nurtured by great teachers such as Robert Belknap. For Bob, the latest technologies may be a fascination, but never a necessity in determining what is important to ask in any investigative process. He has always been most curious about how his students think, and often he has helped them by that interest to become thoughtful individuals of deep integrity. They have been his product, and they have been built to last—to weather the harshest winters and the longest droughts, without losing their intellectual core.

Along with Professors Neustadt, Beeson, and Shapiro, Bob gave me my start, in the Columbia Core Curriculum. The experience was foundational. Now, after a long career of my own in research, teaching, public speaking and academic administration, I follow him as a teacher in the Core and as Director of the Seminars. It has been an honor to be his student and his colleague and a gift as well, to have become his successor.

To Bob
(with apologies to Goethe)

I do not say goodbye.
The office has been messy, full of books and papers, but the opposite of the study known as Faust’s.

I enter here and “all the fields and meadows” do not “lie wrapped in shade in deepest night behind.”

I do not know if you have ever tried the famous re-interpretation of Creation—because in your world in the beginning were the Word, the Mind, the Strength, and Deed, and all of them together, in one encyclopedic blend of simple love for work and of unfailing intellect.

The Second Civil War: Poverty, Power, and the Propagandizing of Obamaphobia
by
PATRICIA J. WILLIAMS

The Tannenbaum Lectures honor the memory of Professor Frank Tannenbaum, founder of the University Seminars in 1945 and their director until his death in 1969. He and his wife, Jane Belo Tannenbaum, established a trust to be invested and reinvested, and included in Columbia’s permanent endowment. Its income covers most of the Seminar’s expenses. Logistical support from Columbia and donations from individuals and institutional contributors supplement this endowment.

Robert L. Belknap is Professor Emeritus of Russian at Columbia. He was educated at Princeton University, The University of Paris, Columbia University, and Leningrad (now St. Petersburg) State University. He is the author of The Structure of The Brothers Karamazov; The Genesis of The Brothers Karamazov; and other studies of Russian literature and of university education. He teaches courses in Russian and comparative literature and literary theory. He has taught Columbia’s Humanities course in major texts of the Western tradition for fifty years, and recently a sequel to it that involves major Asian classics. He has chaired the Humanities course and the Slavic Department, been Director of the Russian (now Harriman) Institute, and served as Dean of Students and Acting Dean of the College at Columbia. He is President of the Whiting Foundation and chaired the Trustees of the Brearley School for seven years. He was a member of the University Seminar on Hermeneutics, and has chaired the University Seminars on Literary Theory and on Slavic History and Culture. From 2000 to 2010, he was director of the University Seminars.

Patricia J. Williams is a graduate of Wellesley College and Harvard Law School. She is a professor of law at Columbia University in New York City, and authors a monthly column, “Diary of a Mad Law Professor,” for The Nation magazine. Her work in the fields of civil and human rights has been widely recognized. In 1997, she delivered the annual Reith Lectures for the BBC. In the arts, she has worked with playwright Anna Deavere Smith’s Institute for Arts and Civic Dialogue. She and jazz saxophonist Oliver Lake have collaborated on a number of performance pieces. With British filmmaker Isaac Julien, she wrote and narrated a short film, entitled “That Rush!” She is the recipient of numerous awards, honorary degrees and fellowships, including a MacArthur Fellowship. Board memberships have included the Center for Constitutional Rights, the Society of American Law Teachers, the National Organization for Women’s Legal Defense and Education Fund, Conjunction Arts, the Andy Warhol Foundation, and Wellesley College. Her books include: The Alchemy of Race and Rights: Diary of a Law Professor, Harvard University Press, 1991; The Rooster’s Egg: On the Persistence of Prejudice, Harvard University Press, 1995; Seeing a Color-Blind Future: The Paradox of Race, Reith Lectures, 1997; reprinted by Noonday Press, 1998; and Open House: On Family Food, Friends, Piano Lessons and the Search for a Room of My Own, Farrar Straus and Giroux, 2004.

Over the last decade or so, the dominance of angry, polemical voices in American politics and media has had a profound effect on the terms of debate in the United States. This increase has been facilitated by four sources of particular volatility: first, an economic queasiness as threatened middle-class aspirations for either mobility or stability. Second, regulatory changes have allowed the concentration of broadcast ownership into monolithic infotainment entities, while abandoning many of the traditional standards of fact-based reporting. A third factor is the rising influence of corporately—and privately—underwritten partisan pundits and ideologues whose tightly controlled reiteration of talking points has lent them disproportionate credibility, sometimes regardless of content. Finally, unprecedented global diaspora and reorganization of population groups—phenomena simultaneously enhanced and confused by social networking technology—have both redrawn and threatened boundaries, whether ethnic, class, religious, racial or national. A new nativism is developing that resurrects many of our oldest scapegoats, and repurposes them in freshly fearsome packaging.

This presentation will examine the history and consequence of our emergent divide.

The Great Depression of the 1930s was not only a source of widespread distress, but also a source of new ideas and changing culture. The three remarkable artists are the centerpiece of three lectures. But the photographers are also representatives of three distinct visions of American culture.

Alan Brinkley is the Allan Nevins Professor of History at Columbia, where he has taught since 1991. He was chair of the Department of History from 2000 to 2003, and served as University Provost from 2003 to 2009. Before coming to Columbia, he taught at M.I.T., Harvard, and the City University of New York Graduate Center. In 1998–99, he was the Harmsworth Professor of American History at Oxford University.

His published works include Voices of Protest: Huey Long, Father Coughlin, and the Great Depression (Knopf, 1982), which won the 1983 National Book Award; The Unfinished Nation: A Concise History of the American People (Knopf, 1992); The End of Reform: New Deal Liberalism in Recession and War (Knopf, 1995); Liberalism and Its Discontents (Harvard, 1998); Franklin Delano Roosevelt (Oxford, 2009); and The Publisher: Henry Luce and His American Century (Knopf, 2010).

His essays, articles, and reviews have appeared in scholarly journals and in such periodicals as the New York Review of Books, the New Yorker, the New York Times Book Review, the New York Times Magazine, the New Republic, Time, Newsweek, the Times Literary Supplement, and the London Review of Books. He has received fellowships from the American National Endowment for the Humanities, the American Council of Learned Societies, the Guggenheim Foundation, the Woodrow Wilson Center, the National Humanities Center, the Media Studies Center, and the Russell Sage Foundation. He was the recipient of the Joseph R. Levenson Memorial Teaching Prize at Harvard in 1987 and the Great Teacher Award at Columbia in 2003. He is chairman of the board of trustees of the Century Foundation, a trustee of the National Humanities Center, and a trustee of Oxford University Press. He is a member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences.

He received his A.B. from Princeton and his Ph.D. from Harvard.

In 1991, Leonard Hastings Schoff’s will endowed a fund to support the publication of books written under the auspices of the University Seminars that involve the Social Sciences or their subject matter and have been accepted for publication. Seminar members, guests, and even speakers may send the Seminars Director a letter, or better, an e-mail, naming the publisher, describing the contribution of a Seminar to some part of their text, and giving an outline or table of contents in a page or two, as well as listing the sums available and those needed for indexing, translating, editing, picture permissions, etc. Usually, though not always, the Schoff Committee decides on its allocation quite promptly. Since 2008, the University Seminars, the Warner Family, and others have provided funds for parallel awards, to be granted in the same way as the Schoff funds, but not restricted to the social sciences. This fund is named for Aaron Warner, the social scientist and activist who ran the University Seminars from 1976 to 2000 and had a deep interest in both the arts and the natural sciences. In the period since the last Directory, the following books have been published with assistance from the Schoff or the Warner funds:

In 2010–2011, five books were published with assistance from the Schoff fund; and sixteen books were published with aid from the Warner fund:

A conference staging the critical reception by scholars in the field. The “Notes for a General History of Cinema,” written by Eisenstein in 1947–48 while he was organizing a section of Film Theory and History at the Institute of Art of the Soviet Academy of Sciences, present us with a map of all topics Eisenstein would have liked to discuss, in a volume dedicated to the history and pre-history of cinema—a volume he planned but never wrote, due to his death in 1948. What is surprising in these notes—structured like a long index—is the quantity and variety of extra- and pre-cinematographic references (literature, music, architecture, photography, painting, theater, puppet theater, but also Western and non-Western popular feasts and traditions, religious rites and processions, moving from ‘high’ art to popular forms of entertainment such as wax museums, circuses, etc.): a compound of some of the references Eisenstein had already discussed in his previous published and unpublished texts (“Montage” of 1937, “Nonindifferent Nature” of 1945–47, “Method” of 1932–48), with a new, strong emphasis on pre-cinematographic media (Panorama, Diorama, stereoscopic photography, cronophotography, aerial photography, travelogues) as well as on the relationships with the avant-gardes (photomontages of Berlin dadaists, photograms of Man Ray and Moholy-Nagy, et al.). Read within the context of the rest of his theoretical oeuvre, these “Notes” offer further insight into Eisenstein’s ideas on the relationships between cinema and the other arts/media, his anthropologically rooted aesthetics, and his use of montage as a hermeneutic and historiographic tool. The bulk of the unpublished manuscript comes from RGALI, the State Archive, but there are some sheets added from the Eisenstein Kabinett.

(Directed by Alexander Kluge, 2008, 84 min.)
Sponsored by Columbia University Seminar on Cinema & Interdisciplinary Interpretation; Columbia University Seminar on Sites of Cinema; The Harriman Institute: Russian, Eurasian and Eastern European Studies; Columbia University School of the Arts Film Program; Permanent Seminar on History of Film Theories; Museo del cinema di Torino

Coordinators: Professor Jane Gaines (Columbia University School of the Arts), Professor Francesco Casetti (Yale University); organizers: Assistant Professor Nico Baumbauch (Columbia University School of the Arts), Luka Arsenjuk (Jr. Fellow, International Research Center/Cultural Studies, Vienna)
The conference is cosponsored by the Herbert H. Lehman Center for American History at Columbia University; the Italian Academy for Advanced Studies at Columbia University; the Graduate School of Architecture, Planning, and Preservation, Columbia University; the Seminar on the City, University Seminars, Columbia University; and the Inter-university Consortium for the Study of European-American Politics and History (CISPEA). Professor Lisa Keller, Chair of the Seminar on the City and Lehman Faculty Fellow, is chair of the conference.

The central question that the conference will address is the issue of cities in the United States and Europe with declining populations across different time periods, with a focus on the 20th and 21st centuries. We are accustomed to the modern world of the ever-expanding metropolis, in which populations aggregate in an ever-increasing number of mega cities. While there are countless examples of such growth, there are also numerous large urban centers in which the population is declining significantly, with concomitant social, economic and political impact. We are interested in examining what this means for the future of cities. In the midst of deindustrialization, severe economic challenges, and new immigration patterns, do these “shrinking” cities represent a downward spiral for urban settlement? Or does their contraction signify a way to save cities by making them more workable? What are the factors leading to shrinkage? What historical precedents are there for contraction? How have cities coped with such changes? What are the implications for future planning? Is contraction tied into decay, or is it symptomatic of a new urban reality in which smaller cities can be more efficient and effective? This cross-disciplinary conference will look at both historical and contemporary examples of cities with declining populations, and we expect historians, economists, urban planners, and others to participate in formulating a picture of the 21st century urban future.

Republicanism as a theory of political liberty under the government of the law and a constitution is the distinguished political culture to which Italy has made fundamental contributions. The role of Roman republicanism in the making of the liberty of the moderns has been the core thesis of the work of seminal scholars like Quentin Skinner and J.G.A. Pocock, who have reconstructed the trajectory of classical republicanism from Italian city-states of early Humanism to the English and American revolutions. More recently, Jean-Fabian Spitz has re-evaluated the influence of republicanism in the nineteenth and the twentieth centuries, moving away from the ‘obstacle’ of the French revolution and the Terror to show how the republican theory of liberty shaped and permeated liberal and democratic society in France. Without necessarily sharing these interpretations and historical reconstructions, they serve to highlight the wider significance of the subject and its interest for political theorists and historians.

The leading idea of this workshop is to bring to light and study the republican political tradition as it emerged in Italy after the French revolution, an event that radically changed republicanism and inaugurated new problems. These include, for example, the role of civil society and wage labor, the relations between political virtue and individual liberty, between inalienable humans rights and the ethics of citizenship, and finally between private morality and public ethics. But above all, the legacy of the French revolution meant that the nation now became the new political reality in which popular sovereignty was seen to be rooted and based. All these issues come together when we confront the question of how reception and revision of classical republicanism after Napoleon was able to rekindle a political culture of civil liberty in Italy.

The workshop will start with the Neapolitan revolution of 1799, since this marked the most distinctive attempt in Italy to build a constitution of freedom despite the presence of a foreign force of occupation. The experience and failure of that revolution gave rise to extremely important debates over agency and strategies of self-government. These debates refocused on the cultural foundations of republican government, an issue that makes the analysis of the role Sismondi timely and crucial. Sismondi was not only an economist and a critic of free market liberal economics, but also an historian who consciously sought to reposition the roots of the republican tradition in the Middle Age in order to emancipate it from the Roman tradition that the Jacobins had appropriated to legitimize their revolutionary language. As a result of this historical relocation, Sismondi was able to present republicanism not solely as a theory of liberty but above all as a theory that individual liberty and social stability required a modern constitutional government. It was from Sismondi’s work that an Italian national historiography of liberty took inspiration. Indeed, Sismondi set the origins of the modern history of liberty in Europe as well as Italy in the independent Italian city-states of the Middle Age. It was this that made it possible for the leaders of the Italian Risorgimento to call for political unity in the name of an historical tradition of liberty—the comunes—that emerged in the Middle Ages during the struggles against the Empire and as vindication of self-government.

Sismondi’s work is also essential for contextualizing the work the historian and theorist Pasquale Villari. Although he is associated primarily with conservative thought and his writings on the Southern Question and the moral question of the new Italian state, Villari played a central role in the debate on republicanism. His great political history of the Florentine republic, along with the important monographs on Machiavelli and Savonarola that were read throughout Europe, were critical historiographical and political texts that deeply influenced the work of Gaetano Salvemini, the great historian of the Medieval Italian communes, who brilliantly linked the analysis of political institutions and political liberty to that of social struggles for emancipation and who saw in republicanism the opportunity to expand the idea of liberty as non-domination (to use a contemporary rendering of republicanism) in ways that would engage with the issues of economic inequality and class conflicts.

Before Salvemini, Giuseppe Mazzini had already tried to connect the domain of production and the domain of politics, and his work clearly had an impact on the following generation of scholars (like Salvemini himself) that deserves closer exploration and study. However, Mazzini’s revulsion with all theories of class conflict because of the threat they posed to his search for new forms of national consensus compromised the encounter between republicanism and socialism in ways that deeply affected the identity of Italian socialism and the place of the theory of liberty. But Mazzini remains a pivotal figure in post-French revolution republicanism, both Italian and international, and the leading protagonist of the need for a strongly democratic republic framed by the ideals of national concord that its constitution would reflect and document.

These questions all converged in the political experience of republicanism in the years of fascism. In my view, there is a very strong case for reconsidering Piero Gobetti’s suggestion that Italian national republican tradition was the key foundation of modern liberalism and democracy. This idea, together with Salvemini’s call for finding ways of integrating the issue of social emancipation more fully in the republican idea of liberty, also inspired first Carlo Rosselli during the period of his exile and leadership of Giustizia e Libertà as well as the political program of the Partito d’Azione, one of the protagonists—albeit not a successful one—in the post-World War Two process of constitution making in Italy. In investigating the political culture of anti-Fascist movements the answers to be address might be phrased as follows: ‘Is it possible to discover similar notions of civil liberty in the ideal of liberty shared by the Communist and Socialist anti-Fascism movements? Is it possible to detect in their political ideas a notion of political liberty that is autonomous from economics? And moreover, how important was the 19th century’s social ‘contamination’ of political republicanism in the making of 20th century liberal and democratic culture? In a word, can we interpret Italian political tradition—the republican tradition—as a tradition that was not only able to persist but also to permeate the culture that inspired leftist movements, which have made an important contribution to the formation of citizenship in post-World War Two in Italy?

This brings our inquiry to the highest moment of Italy’s modern republicanism: the making of the Constitution, the first expression of a constituent democratic power that Italy has experienced as a unified nation. What was the presence and impact of republicanism in the Republic of political parties that led the Constitutive Assembly, and discussed and approved the Constitution of the Italian Republic? It is not, for instance, significant that the suffrage right has been discussed and sanctioned by the Italian constituents as a ‘right-and-duty’ and that ‘labor’ was conceived as foundational of the very political legitimacy or liberty. Now, it is possible to detect the presence of the republican tradition in the political culture of the constituents and the political parties that represented it.
This conference—the first of its kind in North America—will bring together pioneering scholars of Platonov and Soviet culture to explore his peculiar style, consider it in context, and attempt to make meaning from it.

A Seminar with Griselda Pollock and Max Silverman on the concept of a concentrationary imaginary

Wednesday March 2
Faculty House, Columbia University

Responses by Stuart Liebman, Matthew Hart and Sonali Thakkar

Moderated by Marianne Hirsch

5 pm: Screening of Nuit et Brouillard (Night and Fog)
5:30–8:00 pm: Papers by Griselda Pollock and Max Silverman (both of the University of Leeds), followed by responses and discussion

The discussion will address some of the following questions focusing on Nuit et Brouillard:

• What were the aesthetic strategies used in the first attempt at analytical commemorative representation of the concentrationary universe in Resnais’s Nuit et Brouillard (1955)?
• How did Resnais and Cayrol define a politics of resistance to the ‘totalitarian disease’?
• How did the politics of representation introduced into the film by Cayrol form what he termed an ‘art concentrationnaire’?
• How was this vision of art as politics dependent on the creation of an anxious relationship between horror and the everyday rooted in surrealist aesthetics?
• What are the other main features of this ‘language’ of cinematic representation and how does its combination of sound, image, text and archive footage constitute a departure in post-war art, cinema and literature?
• What are the legacies in post-war culture of Cayrol/Resnais’s collaboration and aesthetic-political propositions?

Presented by The University Seminar on Cultural Memory
How can we write the history of media technologies and highlight their impact on aesthetics and knowledge without relapsing into deterministic or apocalyptic modes of thinking? How can we write the histories of media without privileging cultural semantics over the technical materialities of media? How do disciplinary epistemologies shape or impede our understanding of media? To what extent do media write and conceive of their own history and evolution? What constitutes the materiality of a medium: its technological apparatus, the epistemic conditions of its gradual emergence and evolution, or its appropriation and use in various cultural practices?

THURSDAY, MARCH 24

Respondent: Ben Kafka (New York University)

1:30–5:00 pm
501 Schermerhorn Hall, Columbia University
Panel II: The Making and Marking of Time
Moderated by Nikolaus Wegmann

Media mark their own time and the temporality inherent in media may also shape our written historiographies of media. Yet, at the same time, the measuring and conception of time is in itself subject to history and shaped by the introduction of technical instruments.
Weihong Bao (Columbia University)
Sym pathetic Vibration: Hypnotism, Wireless Cinema, and the Invention of Intermedial Spectatorship in 1920s China
Respondent: Marilyn Ivy (Columbia University)

1:30–5:00 pm
501 Schermerhorn Hall, Columbia University
Panel IV: Histories of Material Media
Moderated by Reinhold Martin

The Archaeology of Media, the cultural history of early cinema, and the historical study of Communications constitute different modes of writing the history of material technologies. This panel will explore the diverging and overlapping methods of these approaches to the question of how we can write the history of media.

Final Discussion

SATURDAY, MARCH 26

10:00 am–12:30 pm
501 Schermerhorn Hall, Columbia University
Panel III: Materialities of Culture and Technology
Moderated by Stefan Andriopoulos

In what ways do religions and other cultural processes form part of the a priori that give rise to media? This panel will explore the interaction between technical media and religious imagination by analyzing and contrasting materialities of culture and technology.

AFRICA AFTER THE COLD WAR

With Dr. Adekeye Adebajo, Executive Director,
Centre for Conflict Resolution, Cape Town, South Africa

Wednesday, October 27, 2010
6:00–8:00pm
Faculty House, Columbia University

At the 1884–1885 Conference of Berlin, a collection of states, mostly European, established the rules for the partition of Africa. The consequences of their decision had immense historical and structural implications apparent in the domestic and international behavior of the continent today. The “Curse,” as the conference came to be called, is the grounding theme of Adekeye Adebajo’s trenchant study, though his guiding focus is the development of Africa after the Cold War.

Adebajo opens with Africa’s quest for security, featuring essays on the continent’s political institutions, such as the African Union and subregional bodies. He follows with chapters on the United Nations and its operations in Africa, particularly its political, peacekeeping, and socioeconomic missions. Adebajo includes two rare profiles of the secretary generals who worked with the UN from 1992 to 2006: Egypt’s Boutros Boutros-Ghali and Ghana’s Kofi Annan. Africa’s pursuit of representative leadership informs the next section, with essays examining the hegemonic influence of South Africa, Nigeria, China, France, and the United States. Concluding chapters discuss Africa’s search for unity, exploring the direct and indirect impact of Nelson Mandela, Thabo Mbeki, Kwame Nkrumah, Cecil Rhodes, Barack Obama, and Mahatma Gandhi. Adebajo also conducts a comparative assessment of the African and European Unions.

CONFERENCE PARTICIPANTS

Devin DeWeese is a Professor in the Department of Central Eurasian Studies at Indiana University. His research interests include Islamic Central Asia, Soviet Central Asia, Sufism, Islamization, religions and Inner Asia, and Islamic hagiography, and he has recently taught courses on religion and power in Islamic Central Asia, Islam in the Soviet Union and its successor states, and on the Islamic hagiography of Central Asia. Among his publications is the book Islamization and Native Religion in the Golden Horde: Baba Tükles and Conversion to Islam in Historical and Epic Tradition (Pennsylvania State University Press, 1994 Series “Hermeneutics: Studies in the History of Religions”).

Richard Elovich, a research scientist at the Institute for Social and Economic Research and Policy (IS-ERP) at Columbia University, holds a Ph.D. in medical sociology and a Masters in Public Health. He is a specialist in policy and program development on HIV/AIDS and substance use with over fifteen years experience in the U.S. and internationally. Since 2003, he has led needs assessments and developed HIV programs for international donors, UN agencies, and non-governmental organizations throughout the former Soviet Union and Asia, with a particular focus on most at risk populations.

Erica Johnson is Lecturer and Director of Master’s Studies in Global Studies at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill. Her research and teaching interests are in comparative politics and political economy, with particular focus on post-Soviet state-society relations. Before joining the UNC faculty, Erica was a post-doctoral fellow at Georgetown University’s Center for Eurasian, Russian, and East European Studies. She holds an MA (2005) and PhD (2009) in Political Science from University of Washington in Seattle and an MA (1997) in Russian, East European, and Central Asian Studies from UW.

Salmaan Keshavjee received his Ph.D. in Anthropology and Middle Eastern Studies from Harvard in 1998 and his MD from Stanford in 2001. Dr. Keshavjee is now an Assistant Professor in Social Medicine and in Medicine at the Harvard Medical School and a Physician in the Division of Global Health Equity at the Brigham and Women’s Hospital. He conducted doctoral research in medical anthropology at Harvard University on the health transition in post-Soviet Tajikistan. He currently works with the Division of Global Health Equity and Partners In Health on the implementation of a multidrug-resistant TB treatment program in Tomsk, Russia, and a program to treat patients co-infected with HIV and multidrug-resistant TB in Lesotho.

Erin Koch is an assistant professor in the Department of Anthropology at the University of Kentucky. Her research and teaching interests include postsocialism, medical anthropology, science and technology studies, and global health and humanitarianism. Koch’s prior research in the Republic of Georgia examined the effects of Soviet collapse on tuberculosis and responses to tuberculosis in Georgia. Her current research in Georgia investigates health effects of war and displacement, medical interventions, and politics of care.

Alisher Latyrov, MA (Tajik State National University), MHS (Johns Hopkins University), MA (University College London) is a PhD student at the Wellcome Trust Centre for the History of Medicine at UCL. His doctoral thesis is entitled “The Administration of Addiction: The Politics of Medicine and Opiate Use in Soviet Tajikistan, 1924–1958.” He has also served in the Tajik Presidential Drug Control Agency, directed the country office of Global Initiative on Psychiatry in Tajikistan and assisted UNDP as Sub-Regional Drug Epidemiology Expert for Tajikistan, Turkmenistan and Uzbekistan. He is a corresponding member of the Reference Group to the United Nations on HIV and Injecting Drug Use and has published broadly on the politics of health and healing in Central Asia.

Paula Michaels is an Associate Professor of History at the University of Iowa. She is the author of Curative Powers: Medicine and Empire in Stalin’s Central Asia (University of Pittsburgh Press, 2003), winner of the Association of Women in Slavic Studies’ Heldt Prize and a finalist for the PEN Center USA Literary Award. Michaels has published numerous articles on the history of medicine, women’s history, and film history. With funding from the Guggenheim Foundation, the NEH, and the NIH, she is currently working on an international history of the Lamaze method of childbirth.

Danuta Penkala-Gawecka is Professor of Ethnology and Cultural Anthropology at Adam Mickiewicz University in Poznan, Poland. She is currently the Deputy Director of the Institute of Ethnology and Cultural Anthropology. Her areas of expertise include medical anthropology and Central Asian studies. She conducted fieldwork in Afghanistan, Kazakhstan and Poland. Her interests focus on medical pluralism, traditional and complementary/alternative medicines in Central Asia and the connections between medicine and religion. She published books: Traditional Medicine in Afghanistan and its Transformations (Wrocław, 1988); Complementary Medicine in Kazakhstan: The Force of Tradition and the Pressure of Globalisation (Poznan 2006). She is editor of the oldest Polish ethnological journal “Lud” founded in 1895.

Jeff Sahadeo is an Associate Professor of Political Science and European & Russian Studies at Carleton University. He received his Ph. D. from the University of Illinois, Urbana-Champaign. His teaching interests include diaspora, migration, and empire in Eastern Europe and Asia. He also works on issues of colonialism, nationality, frontiers, and borders in relations of power and the creation of identities and states. A specialist on Central Asia, Dr. Sahadeo has conducted extensive work in Uzbekistan. He also teaches courses on the eastwards expansion of the European Union. Dr. Sahadeo’s current research focuses on issues of migration and interethnic contact between Asian populations of the (former) Soviet Union and majority Russians in the cities of Leningrad/St. Petersburg and Moscow in the post World War II era.

REMEMBERING GUANTÁNAMO

Thursday, April 28, 2011

Opening:
Why “Remember” Guantánamo? Why Now?
9:30–10:30
Elazar Barkan, Director, Columbia University Institute for Human Rights
Elizabeth Silkes, Executive Director, International Coalition of Sites of Conscience
Liz Ševčenko, Senior Consultant, Guantánamo Public Memory Project
Samuel Moyn, Professor of History, Columbia University: “Inhumanity and Dissent after 9/11”

What Do We Need to Remember About Guantánamo? Histories of the US Naval Base and Why They Matter
10:45–12:15
Chair: Gitanjali Gutierrez, Staff Attorney, Center for Constitutional Rights
Jonathan Hansen, Lecturer, Social Studies, Harvard University: “The Ghost of Guantánamo Past”
Examines the US naval base in a historical context reaching back centuries, addressing, among other things, the question, “Is Guantánamo an anomaly?”
Michael Strauss, Professor in International Relations, Centre d’Etudes Diplomatiques et Stratégiques: “The Creation and History of the ‘Legal Black Hole’ at Guantánamo Bay”
An explanation of the 1903 Guantánamo Bay territorial lease, how it inadvertently created a zone where U.S. jurisdiction is incomplete and Cuban jurisdiction is absent, and prospects for the phenomenon to be replicated elsewhere.
Jana Lipman, Professor of History, Tulane University: “Between Cuba and the Base: Living in Guantánamo Before and After the Revolution”
An analysis of Cuban base workers and their ability to navigate between the US naval base and the Cuban community of Guantánamo before and after the 1959 Cuban revolution.

Public Memories of Guantánamo: Visual Media
1:15–3:15
Chair: Bix Gabriel, Deputy Director, International Coalition of Sites of Conscience
Mark Dow, Freelance Writer and Teacher
A look back at “Ghosts of Guantánamo”
A documentary and multimedia exhibit shown at Tap Tap Haitian Restaurant in Miami Beach, Florida in support of Haitian children detained at Guantánamo from May–June 1995.
Holly Ackerman, Librarian for Latin America and Iberia, Duke University
Competing narratives of refugee experiences at Guantánamo from Duke University’s collections relating to Cuban balseros, and from the “Sea is History,” an exhibit of art, images, and stories of Haitians, Dominicans and Cuban refugees.
Sean Kelley, Senior Vice President, Director of Public Programming and P.R., Eastern State Penitentiary Historic Site: “GTMO”
An installation by artist William Cromar at the Eastern State Penitentiary in Philadelphia, once the most famous and expensive prison in the world, now a Site of Conscience seeking to raise questions about the penal system and criminal justice today.
Edmund Clark, Photographer: “Guantánamo: If the Light Goes Out”
A study of three ideas of home: the naval base at Guantánamo which is home to the American community and of which the prison camps are just a part; the complex of camps where the detainees have been held; and the homes, new and old, where the former detainees now find themselves trying to rebuild their lives.
Brainstorm:
What do we need to remember about Guantánamo?

Public Memories of Guantánamo:
Narratives and Performance
3:30–5:30

Chair: Mary Marshall Clark, Director, Columbia University Oral History Research Office

The approach and initial findings of the Columbia University Oral History Research Office’s projects on Guantánamo and the Rule of Law. In this public interview, Shayana Kadidal will speak about the work of the Center for Constitutional Rights from 2002 to the present moment, in defending detainees and challenging torture.

Jameel Jaffer, Deputy Legal Director, American Civil Liberties Union
“Reckoning with Torture”: a one-of-a-kind performance/installation event with readings from declassified government documents that expose the scope and human cost of the post-9/11 torture program.

Elena Razlogova, Co-Coordinator, The Guantánamo mobile Project, Associate Professor of History, Concordia University
“The Guantánamo mobile Project,” a mobile media van designed to inform and collect public opinion about the US detention of prisoners at Guantánamo Bay, Cuba.

Brainstorm
How can we “remember” Guantánamo—connecting its past to its ongoing reality?

Closing and Next Steps
5:30
Connecting Memory to Action: Comparative Perspectives for Remembering Guantánamo
10:15–11:45

Chair: Liz Sevcenko, Senior Consultant, Guantánamo Public Memory Project

Louis Bickford, Director, New York Office, Robert F. Kennedy Center for Justice & Human Rights “Memory as Prevention: Remembering, Mass Atrocity, and Human Rights in Comparative Perspective”

Looking at projects at American museums and historic sites that have focused on detainment and secret and even illegal activity, this talk will focus on the challenges of addressing history that’s “out of sight,” not so much hidden as off our cognitive maps, ignored or overlooked.

Lunch Session
Imagining a Virtual Guantánamo Site of Conscience: Gitmo 2.0
11:45–1:15

Bix Gabriel, Deputy Director, International Coalition of Sites of Conscience

What can a virtual Gitmo Site of Conscience look like? Sneak preview Gitmo 2.0, a website prototype featuring virtual exhibits, audio portraits, and public dialogues. Discuss:

• What stories need to be told?
• What questions need to be raised?
• How can we draw responsible connections between past and present?
• How can we simultaneously inspire truth telling, dialogue, and action? What does “multiple perspectives” mean in the context of Guantánamo?

CURRENT AND FUTURE DIRECTIONS IN STUDIES OF EIGHTEENTH-CENTURY SCIENCE

Friday, April 29 at 6 pm
Columbia University’s Maison Française, 2nd Floor Buell Hall

Panelists:
Joseph Drury (Wesleyan University, English)
Jonathan Kramnick (Rutgers University, New Brunswick, English)
Joan Landes (Pennsylvania State University, History and Women’s Studies)
Cristobal Silva (Columbia University, English)
Rivka Swenson (Virginia Commonwealth University, English)

The event will begin with brief remarks from each panelist followed by guided discussion. After a break for a light buffet supper and drinks, the roundtable will reconvene for an extended open discussion with the audience.

Co-chaired by Joanna Stalnaker (Columbia University, French) and Al Coppola (John Jay College, English).

Hosted by Columbia’s Maison Française, the Columbia University Seminar in Eighteenth-Century European Culture, the Columbia University Seminar on Early Modern France and Fordham University’s NY Eighteenth-Century Seminar.

Joseph Drury is currently an assistant professor of English at Wesleyan University, but will be moving to Villanova University in the fall. He has published articles in Eighteenth-Century Fiction and Novel: A Forum on Fiction, and is working on a book manuscript entitled, The Machine in the Novel: Science, Technology and Narrative Form in Eighteenth-Century Britain, which looks at the impact of new machines on the formal development of the novel during Britain’s Industrial Enlightenment.

Jonathan Kramnick’s research and teaching is in eighteenth-century literature and philosophy, philosophical approaches to literature, and cognitive science and the arts. He is the author most recently of Actions and Objects, from Hobbes to Richardson (Stanford University Press, 2010). This book brings together his interests in mind, material objects, and theories of action during the long eighteenth century. His previous publications include Making the English Canon: Print Capitalism and the Cultural Past, 1700–1770 (Cambridge University Press, 1999) and various articles on the literature, philosophy, and science of the long eighteenth century. His next book, under contract with the University of Chicago Press, will be Paper Minds: Between Literature, Philosophy, and Science. He is the recipient of fellowships from the Stanford Humanities Center, the National Endowment for the Humanities, the Huntington Library, and the William Andrews Clark Memorial Library.

Joan B. Landes is Walter L. and Helen Ferrer Professor of Early Modern History and Women’s Studies, Penn State University. Her books include: Visualizing The Nation: Gender, Representation, and Revolution in Eighteenth-Century France; Women and the Public Sphere in the Age of the French Revolution; Monstrous Bodies/Political Monstrosities in Early Modern Europe; Feminism, the Public and the Private and the forthcoming Gorgeous Beasts: Animal Bodies in Historical Perspective. She has served as President of the American Society of Eighteenth-Century Studies 2002/03 and held fellowships from, among others, the Getty Research Institute, the Guggenheim Foundation, Swedish Collegium for Advanced Study in the Social Sciences, Humanities Research Centre of the Australian National University, the National Endowment for the Humanities, and the Mary Ingraham Bunting Institute of Radcliffe College.

Cristobal Silva is Assistant Professor in the Department of English and Comparative Literature at Columbia University, and an Editor at The Eighteenth Century: Theory and Interpretation. His first book, Miraculous Plagues: An Epidemiology of Early New England Narrative, was released in July 2011 by Oxford University Press, and he is currently at work on a project about the intersections of Western and African medicine during the long eighteenth century.

Rivka Swenson is an assistant professor of English at Virginia Commonwealth University. She is completing a manuscript on aesthetics and politics titled “Between the Many and the One: Recovering the Location of Identity in British Thought and Novels after Unionism, 1654–1822.” She is also working on a second manuscript, concerned with optical theory, atomism, and literature titled “Mastered by All I Survey: Optics, Gender, and the Disabling Eighteenth-Century Gaze.” Her work has appeared in Studies in Eighteenth-Century Culture, The Eighteenth Century: Theory and Interpretation, Journal of Narrative Theory and in New Contexts for Eighteenth-Century British Fiction, a Festschrift collection for Jerry Beasley. In addition, she co-edited the Festschrift Imagining Selves: Essays in Honor of Patricia Meyer Spacks and is co-editor, with Nush Powell, of “Sensational Subjects,” a Special Issue of The Eighteenth Century: Theory and Interpretation, scheduled for publication in 2013.
Specialists in the European ‘middle ages’—a period wrongly, and almost universally, perceived in our society as the very epitome of darkness and irrelevance—are increasingly eager to participate in the long tradition of philosophically-sensitive history nourished by ethical concerns. The discussion offers a forum for debating the distinctive contribution that medievalists can make in addressing a range of contemporary injustices, from the private realm (family, sexuality, marriage), through social policy (in regard to poverty, prisons, the treatment of ‘marginal’ members of society, end-of-life care), to the emphatically international (refugees; torture; western relations with the Islamic world). The participants leading this discussion, contributors to and the co-editors of Why the Middle Ages Matter (Routledge, 2011), shared a desire to examine the contributions that medievalists can make to understanding—and responding to—a range of contemporary social injustices. While recognizing that it may be risky to expect history to provide lessons directly applicable to our own situations, the study of this period underscores both the perseverance of certain elements of human experience, and the radical change in other circumstances, reminding us that beliefs and practices we might think are unalterable or universal are neither. If we do not speak out and contribute to the ongoing discussions of the international and domestic problems faced by our society, we may think we are adhering to a noble professional ideal. Yet by remaining silent we are rather taking a position that verges on tacit collusion in the injustices of the present.

Coeditors Celia Chazelle (The College of New Jersey), Simon Doubleday (Hofstra University), Felice Lifshitz (Florida International University), Amy Remensnyder (Brown University); and contributors Guy Geltner (University of Oxford) and Kristina Richardson (Queens College of the City University of New York)

Below is a listing of the 2010–2011 University Seminars, with their topics and speakers. The seminars are listed in order of their Seminar Number, which roughly follows their chronological founding. Some of our seminars are still going strong after more than 60 years; new ones continue to be formed. Four seminars were inaugurated last year. Seminars sometimes stop meeting, temporarily or permanently, for practical or intellectual reasons. Only those seminars that met this past year are listed. Our seminars span a wide range of interests, from contemporary and historical topics in religion, literature, and law, to technical and administrative issues in contemporary society, to area studies, Shakespeare and the sciences.

THE PROBLEM OF PEACE (403)

Founded: 1945

This seminar is concerned broadly with the maintenance of international peace and security and with the settlement of international disputes. It considers specific conflicts and also discusses the contemporary role of the United Nations, multinational peacekeeping, humanitarian efforts, and other measures for the resolution of international conflicts.

Chair: Professor Roy Lee
Rapporteur: Ms. Tanya O’Carroll

The approaches to religion in this seminar range from the philosophical through the anthropological to the historical and comparative. We concern ourselves with religion in all of its manifestations—ancient and modern, primitive and civilized, heretical and orthodox, individual and cosmic. The guiding thread is whatever subjects are uppermost in the minds of those composing the membership at a given time. Since members come from different disciplines as well as different traditions and have a variety of personal orientations, we are assured maximum openness and flexibility.

EIGHTEENTH-CENTURY EUROPEAN CULTURE (417)

Founded: 1962

Scholars from a variety of disciplines—history, literature, philosophy, political science, music, and art—present papers from work in progress treating some aspect of eighteenth-century European culture. Special topics of the Seminar in recent years have included a symposium on the 18th-century reception of Classical, Hellenistic, and Late Antique texts (2003) and the intellectual origins of freedom of speech (2007–2008). More recently, the Seminar has co-sponsored, with the Seminar on Early Modern France, a series of roundtables on new directions in eighteenth-century studies under the rubric of “Literature and History in Dialogue.” Past roundtables have been devoted to concepts of authorship (Fall 2010) and science studies (Spring 2011), and the 2011–12 academic year will host events on comparative colonialisms and orientalisms (Fall 2011) and on slavery, race, and racial science (Spring 2012).

This seminar addresses issues related to the structure and management of purposeful human enterprises. The membership is highly interdisciplinary. In addition to university and visiting scholars, distinguished individuals from industry and government participate regularly. The seminar selects themes for deliberation for one or more academic years. Recent themes have been: concept formation in developing theories of management; how should managers be educated, with implications for business administration curricula; managing increasing complexity, scale and change; measurement in management; and currently, managing in times of fundamental transformations. The consistent long-range effort has been toward an operationally verifiable theory of organizing and managing, including managers’ education and training, and the emerging effects of globalization.

The concern of this seminar is the history, literature, and culture of the United States, focusing on the period from the nineteenth century to the present. Recent subjects have ranged from Margaret Fuller to the Hawaiian sovereignty movement, from Asian American fashion designers to letters from former slaves who settled in Liberia. A number of presentations have positioned the United States in transnational or comparative contexts. The seminar’s strength is the variety of fields represented by its intellectually active participants. The very lively discussion periods are one of the most appealing aspects of this seminar.

This seminar exists primarily for the purpose of discussing problems which are of common interest to all branches of medieval studies. The seminar particularly encourages interdisciplinary topics and approaches, which will stimulate discussions of issues in the study of medieval culture. One of the great advantages of the seminar is that it brings together representatives of medieval disciplines, from Columbia and elsewhere, who otherwise would have only rare opportunities to talk about questions of common interest.

MODERN EAST ASIA: CHINA (443)

Founded: 1958

This seminar is concerned with the politics, society, culture, and international relations of China from the early nineteenth century to the present. Its broader purpose is to explore the evolution of Chinese civilization over the past century of revolution and rapid social change. Papers—work in progress—are circulated to members and associates in advance of each meeting. Authors are asked to give a brief oral introduction, after which a discussant comments. The entire remainder of each session is comprised of members’ reactions to the paper and the author’s responses.

Members of the seminar investigate the legal, political, and institutional aspects of society both as they function in reality and as they should function according to theory. The investigation is both global and timeless, although European and American interests seem to dominate. Lectures and discussions range from classical Greece, Rome, and Israel, through medieval Europe, Islam, and Asia, to modern and contemporary societies. Aspects of Roman, Talmudic, Islamic, canon and common laws are examined. The majority of the lectures are presented by the members of the seminar, most of whom are academics in history, political science or law, or professionals who have become editors. One or two papers each year are presented by visiting scholars.

KNOWLEDGE, TECHNOLOGY, AND SOCIAL SYSTEMS (467)

Founded: 1966

Technologies, scientific transformations, and new areas of knowledge are continuously, and rapidly, being introduced. These developments are transforming social systems around the world. We have seen networked computers rapidly converging with telephones and TV into globally pervasive digital communications systems. These systems—and the emerging New Media they create—are increasingly impacting what and how we communicate with each other, as well as how we write history and interact among ourselves. The opportunities and threats these and other systems pose to personal and global quality of life, end even to human survival, are very real and relatively little understood. This seminar will consider these aspects, as well as alternative social systems that may lead to a better future for humankind. This seminar was formerly called Computers, Man, and Society.

Abandoning previous, widely held assumptions about the balance of nature and about distinct, bounded, and well-integrated societies or cultures whose stable adaptations to their environments can be identified, analyzed, and explained, the seminar focuses on the flux rather than the balance of nature and on how variable human actions and the ideas behind them relate to that flux or are part of it. Seminar presentations are primarily concerned with showing either complex and contingent interactions of people and their environments or methods and theories for studying and analyzing such interactions.

The University Seminar on South Asia seeks to broaden and deepen understanding about the region of South Asia by providing a forum to discuss ongoing research as well as special topics related to the complex and multiple societies of South Asia both past and present. Drawing together scholars from many different disciplines, the seminar fosters cross-disciplinary discussion and perspectives on a broad range of questions and concerns. In recent years, the seminar has deliberated on such issues as: religion and politics, the political function of violence in South Asia, national integration, language and community, South Asian identities in pre-colonial times, religious iconography, and many other topics. The University Seminar on South Asia is a merger of the University Seminar on Tradition and Change in South and Southeast Asia (founded in 1964) and the University Seminar on Indology (founded in 1993).

This seminar is concerned with political, social, cultural, and religious aspects of Italian life from 1815 to the present. In recent years, the seminar has stressed an interdisciplinary approach to Italian studies, increasing the participation of anthropologists and scholars of art, film, and literature. The seminar meets on the second Friday of the month, from October to April, to discuss a paper presented by a member or an invited speaker. Papers cover a wide range of topics, approaches, and methodologies. The seminar occasionally holds a day-long conference or a more restricted symposium to explore a topic in depth.

This seminar explores a variety of topics each year from the founding of the European colonies in the late sixteenth and early seventeenth centuries, until the demise of the Revolutionary generation in the second quarter of the nineteenth century. The program tries to strike a balance between presentations by established scholars in the field and younger people who are just getting established. It also tries to do justice to the broad interests of colonial specialists, ranging from traditional political and constitutional themes through newer interests in demography, gender, race, and highly refined methodologies. Although the focus of the seminar has primarily been historical, participation by scholars in literature, religion, and other fields is increasingly encouraged.

POLLUTION AND WATER RESOURCES:
SCIENTIFIC AND INSTITUTIONAL ASPECTS (495A)

Founded: 1968

The purpose of this seminar is to explore the effects of large scale and efficient regulation of pollution on the redistribution of available water resources. Proceedings of the seminar, collections of the lectures, are published yearly. To date, thirty-nine volumes have been printed. Besides these volumes, the seminar has contributed over forty articles written in seven languages abroad and in the United States. The research institute of the seminar, the American Academy of Ocean Sciences, conducted research actively from 1969 to 1985. During the past thirty years, thirty-three graduate students have participated in the seminar and their participation has been credited toward their studies.

The concerns of this seminar are wide ranging in time, place, and method. Emphasis is on the logic of European and American economic growth from feudal times forward with regular, but less frequent, contributions on Latin America, Asia, and Africa. Topics range from microeconomic studies of firms undergoing rapid technical change and households changing their interaction between home and market to more macroeconomic topics concerned with national and regional economic growth performance, the economics of imperialism, and the political economy of the Great Depression. Given the breadth of the seminar’s membership and interests, comparative economic history is often a central element in seminar discussions. Pre-circulation of papers permits vigorous discussion.

THE ART OF AFRICA, OCEANIA, AND THE AMERICAS (509)

Founded: 1970

Founded by Douglas Fraser, this seminar addresses major issues in the fields of African, Oceanic, Native American, and pre-Hispanic Latin American arts. The seminar provides an opportunity for members to analyze, evaluate, and discuss new and continuing research, as well as various trends in scholarship. Because the membership is comprised of art historians, curators, archeologists, anthropologists, and other field specialists, seminar meetings frequently involve in-depth discussions of theoretical and methodological issues. The seminar sponsors special symposia on diverse topics; the most recent entitled Art as Identity in the Americas.

POLITICAL ECONOMY AND CONTEMPORARY
SOCIAL ISSUES (523)
Founded: 1964

This seminar was founded to study the most compelling questions of the day which then related to the war in Southeast Asia, its causes, and consequences. Today the seminar continues to examine vital current issues with emphasis on their economic and political dimensions. Such issues have included welfare policy, homelessness, and strains in multicultural democracies. The underlying nature and structure of the political economy giving rise to these issues are also considered. In this regard, sessions have addressed the extension of democracy to economic enterprises, refashioning American government, developments in welfare state, changes in Marxism, and new principles of income distribution.

THE MIDDLE EAST (525)

Founded: 1971

The seminar usually meets once a month during the academic year. A prominent expert from here or abroad, commonly from the Middle East, leads a four-hour discussion at each meeting, assuring ample time for serious dialogue on focused issues. The seminar provides a forum for the exchange of ideas and experiences by Middle East experts in various spheres—business, banking and investment, federal service, the foundations, the media, and the liberal professions as well as academia. The seminar has become a medium for carefully defined and informed evaluation of stubborn problems in a region that symbolizes mounting instability and proliferating crises. Detailed minutes are circulated to participating members for use without attribution to uphold the confidentiality of the discussion.

This seminar is comprised of professors, research scientists, and physicians from institutions of higher learning and industry in the greater New York area with a common interest in the biological and behavioral bases of appetitive behavior. Four major areas of interest are found within the group: 1) the control of food and fluid intake in man and animals and their effects on variation in body composition; 2) disorders with links to ingestive behavior such as obesity, bulimia, anorexia nervosa, and diabetes; 3) the role of the brain from pharmacological, physiological, and neuroanatomical perspectives on the control of ingestive behavior; 4) cognitive, social, and environmental controls of ingestive behavior. The seminar thus combines interests in basic control mechanisms with clinical applications.

CULTURE, POWER, BOUNDARIES (531)

Founded: 1971

The Culture, Power, Boundaries Seminar is a forum for work and work-in-progress that strives for a critical analysis of contemporary power relations at local and global scales and how such power relations affect the analysis, reproduction, and transformation of inequality and its cultural expressions. The seminar began forty years ago with a focus on immigration and developed into a broad forum for critical social science. While the majority of seminar members are anthropologists, and presentations tend to focus on case studies, the seminar continues to welcome, as both guests and speakers, other social scientists interested in investigating the power dimension of cultural formations and the cultural aspects of inequality.

This seminar is devoted to exploring substantive as well as methodological issues in the history and philosophy of science. Science is construed broadly and the issues considered range from epistemic and historiographic questions to issues of relevance and accountability. Topics include the presuppositions and practice of a range of life sciences, earth sciences, and social sciences as well as the physical sciences and mathematics. In the physical sciences its interests range from Galileo and Newton to Einstein and contemporary quantum theory and cosmology. In the life sciences and social sciences the fields considered include various forms of historical, evolutionary inquiry (in biology, geology, and the historical social sciences), biotechnology and ecology, economics, psychology and cognitive science, and interpretive social inquiry. The membership of this seminar includes scientists, philosophers, and historians. Most sessions take place in conjunction with the New York City History of Science Working Group.

This seminar serves as an interdisciplinary forum on all aspects and periods of Irish culture. Seminar participants come from a wide variety of fields: history, literature, art history, film studies, political science, sociology, anthropology, music, and folklore. These scholars bring to any topic under discussion a diversity of background which is stimulating and informative for all present. The concern for Irish studies as a field of scholarly inquiry is reflected in the collegial sharing of information about resources and repositories for research in the field.

The seminar draws from the faculty of New York-area universities and independent scholars; regular participants come from as far away as Baltimore. Attendance varies from twenty to forty-five people, with thirty being average. Half of the speakers are from within the seminar, half are from outside. They present works in progress that generally address important groundbreaking topics in film and media studies within an interdisciplinary perspective. Most sessions have a respondent, often a regular member of the seminar. The seminar has an international reputation among film and media scholars and has become the center for ongoing face-to-face scholarly exchanges in the field.

From its inception, this seminar adopted an interdisciplinary approach to Turkic studies, and its members represent many fields. At the same time, their interests span more than twelve centuries. In most years, the program covers a selection of topics reflecting current research of members. Special anniversaries such as the Atatürk centennial (1981–1982), the sixtieth anniversary of the Turkish Republic (1983–1984), and the traveling exhibition, The Age of Sultan Süleyman the Magnificent (1987–1988), however, have provided themes around which all papers or a series of papers have been centered. Discussion on papers presented—no matter what their topic—has shown that dialogue between, for example, political scientist and art historian, medievalist and modernist, can be both stimulating and productive.

Co-Chairs: Professor Christine Philliou and Professor Nader Sohrabi
Rapporteur: Mr. Merve Tezcanli and Ms. Hande Gümüşkemeri

ARABIC STUDIES (559)

Founded: 1977

The concerns of this seminar are interdisciplinary and humanistic. In addition to Arabic language and literature, the range of interests includes topics of significance for Islamic studies: religion, philosophy, science, law and history of the Muslim world, and modern social and cultural history. The seminar affords an opportunity to members and guest speakers to discuss research in progress. Because the members come from several disciplines, the substantive discussions draw upon various fields to expand the sources, help reformulate questions, and anticipate future publications.

For more than 100 years, comparative psychologists have sought to understand the evolution of human intelligence. Until recently, these efforts have been restricted to investigations of conditioned reflexes in human and animal subjects. New paradigms for studying cognitive processes in animals—in particular symbol use and memory—have, for the first time, allowed psychologists and neuroscientists to compare higher thought processes in animals and human beings. Of special interest is the question, how does an animal think without language? This and related questions concerning the nature of animal cognition have defined the themes of this seminar whose members include specialists in animal and human cognition, ethology, philosophy and neuroscience.

In view of the widespread concern with the notion of scientific literacy on the part of scientists, educators at all levels, industrialists, politicians, and the media, this seminar aims to analyze the wide diversity of views as to how a greater measure of scientific literacy might be obtained. There are many ways of teaching science, looking at science, and practicing science. The notion of a universal scientific literacy as a unique set of things is not at all defined; the seminar’s goal is to delineate its significance and implications.

BUDDHIST STUDIES (629)

Founded: 1990

The seminar discusses issues and ongoing research in Buddhist Studies, as well as the interface between Buddhist Studies and other humanistic and scientific disciplines. Buddhism has been a powerful cultural and intellectual, as well as religious, current in all of the Asian civilizations. Its manifestations engage the scholarly concern of members of a wide range of disciplines: religious studies (itself an interdisciplinary enterprise), philosophy, psychology, history, sociology, anthropology, comparative literature, art history, and political science, among others. The seminar is focused not on a narrow range of issues concerning the Buddhist religions, but on a broad range of philosophical, cultural, social, and scientific subjects arising from the long and rich historical experience of the numerous Buddhist civilizations.

Co-Chairs: Professor Michael Como and Professor David Max Moerman
Rapporteur: Mr. Luke Thompson

Professor David Max Moerman, dmoerman@barnard.columbia.edu
This seminar explores the role of religion in American society from cross-disciplinary perspectives: history, anthropology, literature, sociology, theology, material culture, etc. Both “religion” and “America” are broadly defined: “religion” takes into account multicultural and multifarious religious expressions in an increasingly pluralistic setting; “America” includes not merely the United States but Canada and the Caribbean as well. The members of the seminar are particularly interested in examining the religiously rich environment of New York City.

Chair: Professor Randall Balmer
Rapporteur: Mr. Daniel Vaca

GLOBALIZATION, LABOR, AND POPULAR STRUGGLES (671)

Founded: 1998

The seminar seeks to clarify the boundaries of what might be broadly understood as labor politics and the labor movement by examining theoretical and historical developments in order to clarify what has been learned and what needs to be learned in the current world-historical moment of global capitalist reorganization. Included in the purview of the seminar are broader issues in popular politics as well as forms of popular action that are often identified by such alternative labels as “social movements” or “contentious” politics. Presentations, by specialists from the academic and labor communities, focus on issues in contemporary labor and popular politics, on a thematic basis, in settings around the world, and bring to bear a strongly comparative focus, which challenges a common division between specialists on labor in the industrialized world and labor in less developed areas. Debate is facilitated by the provision of papers in advance.

What can the study of language contribute to our understanding of human nature? This question motivates research spanning many intellectual constituencies, for its range exceeds the scope of any one of the core disciplines. The technical study of language has developed across anthropology, electrical engineering, linguistics, neurology, philosophy, psychology, and sociology, and influential research of the recent era of cognitive science has occurred when disciplinary boundaries were transcended. The seminar is a forum for convening this research community of broadly differing expertise, within and beyond the University. As a meeting ground for regular discussion of current events and fundamental questions, the University Seminar on Language and Cognition will direct its focus to the latest breakthroughs and the developing concerns of the scientific community studying language.

NEW MEDIA TEACHING AND LEARNING (683)

Founded: 2000

For many years, computing and education has been a robust and challenging field, but esoteric to many. From the time of the first browser that expanded the demographic base of users exponentially, the use of digital technologies and new media has become part of an explosive reconsideration of educational practice. The breadth of this reconsideration has touched on the content of education, its pedagogy, its place and, by inference, its range of possible participants. In response to this phenomenon, most major universities, including Columbia University, have reacted over the past 15 years with a diversity of initiatives. Some represent the need for attending to generic infrastructure, represented at Columbia by Columbia University Information Technology. Many are content-specific initiatives that grow out of the intrinsic needs of specific fields, represented at Columbia by organizations such as the Institute for Learning Technologies at Teachers College, the Columbia Center for New Media Teaching and Learning, and the Center for Digital Research and Scholarship. What is lacking across the range of initiatives is a unifying conversation that would focus upon the essential questions at this moment of accelerated change in the educational universe. Since the field in its many expressions and through its many entities is engaged primarily in active invention, it is all the more necessary that the time scale of sharing not be driven by the glacial movement of knowledge through scholarly journals, but by the immediate possibilities provided by face to face discourse as well as mediated asynchronous communications, in order to provide benchmarks for good practice.

This seminar is concerned with the history of slavery, particularly in New York City, and its long-term ramifications. Seminar members are scientists, clergy, historians, legal scholars, and sociologists who share an interest in learning from collective memories of slavery. The group will consider the lives and legacy of slaves in New York and how best to commemorate them. A second goal of the seminar is to develop interdisciplinary courses, which can be taught on the university and congregational levels, on the topic of memory and slavery.

This new Seminar takes a broad interdisciplinary approach to Disability Studies—a rapidly expanding field informed by the knowledge base and methodologies of the traditional liberal arts and post-positivist perspectives. Disability Studies focuses on a sociopolitical analysis of disability: it examines both the social meaning we give to variations that exist in human behavior and appearance—implicit or explicit valuings that construct exclusionary categorical binaries—and the role that disability has played, currently plays and can potentially play in the arts, humanities, social sciences, and education.

MODERN GREEK (703)

Founded: 2005

The seminar’s title emphasizes the language—modern Greek—over the metropolitan nation-state, modern Greece. By so doing, the seminar uses the enduring and versatile nature of the language as a symbol for broader themes that, both diachronically and synchronically, depict the tension between sameness and difference, between the continuities and discontinuities that comprise the Hellenic world. The seminar does not limit its focus to Modern Greece, even though it remains its foremost concern, instead it seeks to provide a forum for original interdisciplinary perspectives on Byzantine, Ottoman, and Modern Greece and the Greek diaspora. Seminar participants from a wide variety of fields consider all aspects of the post-classical Greek world as well as the reception and creative appropriation of the classical Greek tradition both in Greece and abroad. The seminar examines Greek relations with Western Europe, the Balkans, the Mediterranean, the Caucasus and the Middle East, tracing also the cultural presence of historic Greek communities in these areas as well as in more recent diasporas, in the United States and Australia. The seminar also examines the presence of diverse communities within Greece.

The focus of the seminar is the cultural and intellectual history of early modern France (from 1500 to 1800) and the approach is interdisciplinary. The seminar includes literature scholars, historians, and philosophers. It meets at least once a month. The current format, which has proven very successful, consists in circulating a relatively short piece written by the invited speaker among the group members and discussing it at the meeting. Thus, instead of a formal talk followed by a few questions, there is an in-depth, 90-minute conversation.

This seminar has had a long and distinguished history at Columbia. Originally called Theory of Literature (469), it was revived under its current title in 2006 with a view to pursuing the relations between literature, philosophy, and the politics that pervades our cultural production and its study. For some time now, literary studies has been engaged in wider theoretical approaches to texts and to the very idea of literature and criticism, and the seminar hopes to take philosophical stock of this tendency as well as to try to bring to it, wherever possible, more creative and more rigorous angles. These goals will initially be pursued broadly and ecumenically and should it turn out that one or other theme surfaces, which demands our sustained focus, the seminar will very likely take it up for a whole year, approaching it from different angles. For the most part, one of the members will circulate a paper, introduced for the seminar by another member, but occasionally, we will invite a speaker from outside the membership.

The University Seminar on Cultural Memory began in 2005 as an interdisciplinary colloquium welcoming graduate students and faculty from Columbia and its neighbors. The Seminar, incepted in 2007, builds upon this already-established community and aims to further develop a vibrant interdisciplinary dialogue on contemporary issues of cultural and collective memory, including but not limited to traumatic memory, collective and national forgetting, memorialization and museology, historical consciousness and historiography, embodied memory and performance, archive and testimony. The Seminar meets monthly and, in addition to discussing chapters and works-in-progress, hosts a series of distinguished visiting speakers, working in close cooperation with relevant departments and institutes at Columbia.

INJURY PREVENTION AND CONTROL (719)

Founded: 2007

Established by the faculty from the Department of Anesthesiology in the College of Physicians and Surgeons and the Department of Epidemiology in the Mailman School of Public Health, this interdisciplinary colloquium welcomes participation by the Columbia University faculty, the professional community and key stakeholders in the New York metropolitan area. This seminar addresses a wide range of issues in the field of injury prevention and control, and provides an opportunity for seminar participants to analyze and evaluate new and continuing issues of growing significance with respect to injury epidemiology. Current topics of interest include motor vehicle crashes and pedestrian injuries, violence, emergency and disaster preparedness, and the implications of aging on health and safety. The seminar provides a framework for a multidisciplinary scholarly exchange of ideas on emerging issues, research, practice and policies affecting injury control and prevention in the 21st century.

Chairs: Professor Robyn Gershon and Professor Charles J. DiMaggio
Rapporteur: Ms. Halley Riley

COMPARATIVE PHILOSOPHY (721)

Founded: 2007

The Comparative Philosophy Seminar seeks to advance constructive philosophical projects by bringing together scholars with training in diverse areas of Asian (mostly Buddhist) thought and Western Philosophy. Comparison in this context is not employed to loan authority to one set of obscure discoveries by revealing its resonances with the works of others, deemed less obscure. Nor does it sociologize philosophy in search of general laws of human cultural and intellectual development. Rather, the intent is to explicate, and employ, the fullness of an expanded philosophical toolset—and see how that works. The seminar ordinarily invites respondents who are versed in the relevant field of philosophical inquiry, but who are not necessarily specialists in Asian thought. In order to facilitate an ongoing conversation, seminar meetings for a given year are loosely organized around a very general theme, which speakers are asked to address when possible. In past years, the themes have been “Personal Identity” (2007–2008) and “Meta-Ethics” (2008–2009).

MODERN EUROPE (723)

Founded: 2007

The Seminar on Modern Europe is a monthly gathering featuring outside speakers who present their new books to the Columbia community for debate and discussion. The Seminar seeks to advance knowledge on the region’s history, politics, and society. We approach Europe from diverse perspectives, complementing nation-oriented studies while placing Europe in transatlantic, multi-national, and global contexts. Emphasizing interdisciplinary dialogue, the seminar provides a venue for sustained discussion with colleagues to contribute to the enrichment of our intellectual community.

THEORY AND HISTORY OF MEDIA (727)

Founded: 2009

The seminar examines the ways in which shifts in media technologies engender, and emerge from, wider changes in cultural and discursive practices, aesthetic and literary forms, and social sensibilities. The theme for 2010–2011 is Medium Histories, and it examines differing epistemological and disciplinary approaches to the question of what constitutes the materiality of a medium and how we might study that materiality.

Historical redress continues to occupy public and political debates as well as scholarly research. The study of human rights abuses and the ways in which redress addresses past injustices has gained broad recognition across a wide range of academic fields. Despite, or perhaps because of this widespread attention, there has been no systematic attempt to integrate what remain largely disconnected efforts into a trans-disciplinary enterprise let alone paradigmatic approach. In short, the history and the contemporary culture of redress remain a scholarly subject matter that is still in search of its own field. The objective of this seminar is to forge a more structured exchange among scholars and practitioners who engage a set of issues that are yet to self identify as an academic field, and is addressed in different disciplinary spaces. The seminar provides a forum for interdisciplinary work on issues at the intersection of history, memory and contemporary politics with particular emphasis on redressing past wrongs and gross violations of human rights. It encompasses questions among others of transitional justice, cultural resolution, and reconciliation. Its main principle revolves round the question of how history and memory inform contemporary politics, in particular around conflict and post conflict societies.

“Sites of Cinema” takes a new approach to the question of cinema at the moment when cinema is said to be in decline, even in some accounts said to be facing its “death.” At this moment, when are focused on a convergence of moving image forms into a single delivery system we take up divergence over convergence, a divergence. Alternative to André Bazin’s question “What is Cinema?” “Sites of Cinema” will ask “Where is Cinema?” Where has it been seen to be and where will it be spaced in the future—as theoretical construct, national culture, material object, artistic work, social practice and space of exhibition. Cinema has moved and is still moving—from theatrical stages to museum walls, in and on buildings as well as within historical nations and regions of the world. “Sites of Cinema” signals our interest in site-specific cinemas plural but also cinema as a total apparatus—the “cinema of the mind” for the mass audience.

NARRATIVE, HEALTH, AND SOCIAL JUSTICE (737)

Founded: 2010

This interdisciplinary and inter-institutional seminar explores the connection between narrative, health, and social justice. If disease, violence, terror, war, poverty and oppression all manifest themselves in narrative, then it is equally true that resistance, justice, healing, activism, and collectivity can be products of a narrative-based approach to ourselves and the world. Narrative understanding helps unpack the complex power relations between North and South, state and worker, disabled body and able-body, bread-earner and child-bearer, subject and researcher, patient and provider as well as self and the other. The seminar will draw from such fields as journalism, performance arts, law, public health, trauma studies, anthropology, sociology, literary studies, medicine, writing, and cultural studies. The common thread will be the narratives we tell as individuals, families, communities, and nations that situate our experience in social, political, and cultural contexts, and that express in so many ways our search for justice in our world and for our world. Our aim is to broaden the mandate of each of our disciplines, challenging each of us to bring a critical, self-reflective eye to our scholarship, teaching, practice, and organizing. How are the stories we tell manifestations of social injustice? How can we transform such stories into narratives of justice, health, and change?

The seminar series continues the line of research established by Professor of Linguistics William Diver. The aim in this approach, as contrasted with formal linguistics, is to account for observed language use, with authentic text as the main source of data. For grammar, this typically entails hypotheses about linguistic signals and their meanings; for phonology, hypotheses about the relevant phonetic characteristics of phonological units. The roles of communication and a human factor are explicitly acknowledged as supporting the explanations offered. The series was begun in 1968 by Diver for the benefit of graduate students working on doctoral theses under his guidance. Since his death in 1995, the series has continued under the auspices of the Columbia School Linguistic Society, with participants presenting analyses or work in progress. Occasionally, it hosts by invitation presenters doing compatible work outside the Columbia School tradition. Work coming out of the seminar has led to numerous conference presentations and publications.

The Global Strategy Seminar is an interdisciplinary group that employs historical analysis to confront future problems in world politics. Each year focuses on a different critical issue in international affairs, ranging from nuclear proliferation to epidemic disease to global warming to religion intolerance. The basic premise of the seminar is that many threats cannot be understood within a framework defined by national borders. It also presumes that we can scarcely begin to consider emerging transnational threats, and the prospects for a more coordinated response, until we better understand the historical successes, and failures, of previous attempts at “global governance.” The seminar thus brings together faculty members and experts from a variety of disciplines, including history, political science, public health, religious studies, and climatology, and paves the way for new methods of collaborative, interdisciplinary research on pressing global challenges. The seminar meets weekly for an intensive 12-week period each summer, running alongside a summer-long seminar on the same topic. Thus, while demonstrating how to think strategically about these global policy challenges, the Global Strategy Seminar also helps orient professional aspiring academics towards the most pressing contemporary problems.
